

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

HINKLEY LIGHTING PARTNERS WITH UNIVERSAL DESIGN LIVING LABORATORY

June 1, 2011– Cleveland, Ohio – Hinkley Lighting has partnered with the Universal Design Living Laboratory (UDLL), a 3,500 square foot residence in Columbus, Ohio by providing special pricing for interior and exterior lighting fixtures.

The UDLL project was initiated by Rosemarie Rossetti, a motivational speaker, author, and wheelchair user, along with her husband Mark Leder, after a bicycling accident left Rossetti paralyzed from the waist down. The couple's mission is to raise awareness of quality indoor and outdoor lifestyles through universal design, green building and healthy home construction practices. Universal design encourages the creation of living/working spaces and products to benefit the widest possible range of people in the widest range of situations, without special or separate design. According to Rosemarie, "A home is not truly sustainable unless it's accessible."

A national demonstration home and garden, the UDLL will also serve as a living laboratory that provides tours to builders, architects, designers and consumers in addition to becoming Rosemarie and Mark's personal residence. More information about the Universal Design Living Laboratory is available at www.udll.com.

Leder and Rossetti worked with interior designer Anna Lyon in selecting Hinkley Lighting. Rossetti said, "When we went to the lighting showroom and saw the Harbor coach light we instantly knew that the size, finish and Arts & Crafts style was the perfect lighting fixture for the exterior of our home. We all agreed that our search for exterior lighting was over!"

Hinkley Lighting provided interior fixtures from its Cordillera, Sloan, Lanza and Fredrick Ramond Flair collections as well as exterior wall lanterns from its Harbor outdoor collection. Visit www.hinkleylighting.com for detailed product information, style tips and a showroom locator.
